

I am deeply disturbed about the plan by Sinclair Broadcasting stations to air a documentary on Senator Kerry's anti-war activities right before an election. Sinclair may believe it has the right to manage its stations as it sees fit, but it does not have the right to use public airwaves to broadcast its political bias IMMEDIATELY before an election. This situation highlights the need to safeguard station ownership (television and radio). The public needs to have a variety of news sources, and its news information should be dictated more locally than this. Please count me in as a very concerned citizen who requests more oversight from the FCC regarding media consolidation, not less.
